Make Modern Medicine Possible

By David Williams '74

The practice of modern medicine would be virtually impossible without the aid of laboratory and medical technologists, according to Prof. Walter B. Wheatley '69, advisor to the laboratory technology students at Auburn.

Editor's Note: This feature is the first of a series about Auburn's programs which contribute to the health professions, either by training professionals or by providing the basic courses upon which professional studies are based.

the national certifying exam, he receives his medical technologist certification from the American Society of Clinical Pathologists, making him an MT, ASCP.

In order for Auburn to maintain its high standards not only in the lab tech field but in other health-related professions, a million dollar funding drive recently has been initiated by the Alumni Association and the School of Arts and Sciences. The money going to laboratory technology will help add new equipment and replace old and worn out apparatuses.

Greater Role for Med Technologist

Recent purchases now allow Prof. Wheatley to offer a course in clinical laboratory instrumentation. According to him, "In recent years increased emphasis has been placed upon the results of laboratory tests in the practice of medicine. This increase has made it mandatory that laboratory procedures be automated. However, there is still an incompatibility between automated methods and manual procedures. Even though we have made a step forward with the new instrumentation course, much of our equipment is old and needs replacing. If we can't stay up with or ahead of the ever-increasing role the laboratory technologist must play on the medical team we might as well get out of the business of training them."

Prof. Wheatley also emphasizes that with the extension of medical knowledge comes a greater role for the lab tech. "The newest form of laboratory technology is in the field of nuclear medicine where a lab tech graduate with additional special training can go on to be qualified as a nuclear medicine specialist. These nuclear specialists are responsible for completing such tests as radioimmunoassay exams which involve mixing a radioactive substance with various body fluids to determine if the organ under study is functioning properly. Radioimmunoassays, cardiac profiles, and enzyme determinations are the kinds of things today's laboratory technologist must know and which were never heard of twenty years ago."

Besides the medical field, Auburn lab tech graduates find employment in a wide range of professions: "I know of at least eight former students who are now working with the state toxicologist and two who are doing environmental work (one with Alabama Power and one with Georgia Power). There is also one at the nuclear plant in Dothan and one at the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta."

Although the job market for lab techs is as open or closed—depending on whether you're an optimist or pessimist—as any professional field at this time, Prof. Wheatley says the biggest problem for lab tech grads is

Alumni Support—

AAG Continues Growth

The number of alumni and friends who participated in the Auburn Annual Giving program during 1976 increased slightly, as did the amount of their gifts. The 1976 total was $541,926.99 from 3,704 gifts. In the 1975 annual giving year, 3,564 gifts totaled $541,813.80.

During the eleven years of AAG's existence, alumni have channeled almost four million dollars through the program to support various Auburn academic endeavors.

Alumni may designate their gifts for a special program or department, and during AAG's lifetime the bulk of the gifts have been so specified. However, many givers indicate that Auburn is free to use their gift in the university's current area of greatest need, and therefore they have insured that funds have been available for special use.

For example, most of the undesignated money has gone into two special areas: the Alumni Professorship Program and the Auburn Student Loan Program. At the time AAG was instigated, many of Auburn's best teachers were being lured away to other colleges and universities by salary increases. Alumni professorships were set up to counteract this drain from Auburn's academic programs by insuring salary supplements for the designated alumni professors. Included were an alumni artist-in-residence and an alumni writer-in-residence. Currently the program has been stabilized with 15 alumni professors and the artist and writer-in-residence.

A second major area of aid came about when the government loan program was curtailed, meaning that many Auburn students who had been able to secure such loans for college were no longer able to do so. The Alumni Association then established through the Annual Giving program a Student Loan Fund, which provides loan funds to Auburn students with the same guidelines of the government programs.

A listing of 1976 contributors to Annual Giving begins on page 6. Special club designations such as President's Club, Dean's Club, Pacesetters' Club, and Century Club recognize the donors of large contributions. The 68 President's Club members gave gifts of $1,000 or more; the 108 Dean's Club members' gifts ranged from $500 through $999; the 91 Pacesetters' gifts were from $300 through $499; the Century Club, from $100 through $299.

Beckett to Head ME

Dr. Royce Beckett, director of the Rodman Laboratory at Rock Island Arsenal, has been named head of the Mechanical Engineering Department at Auburn University.

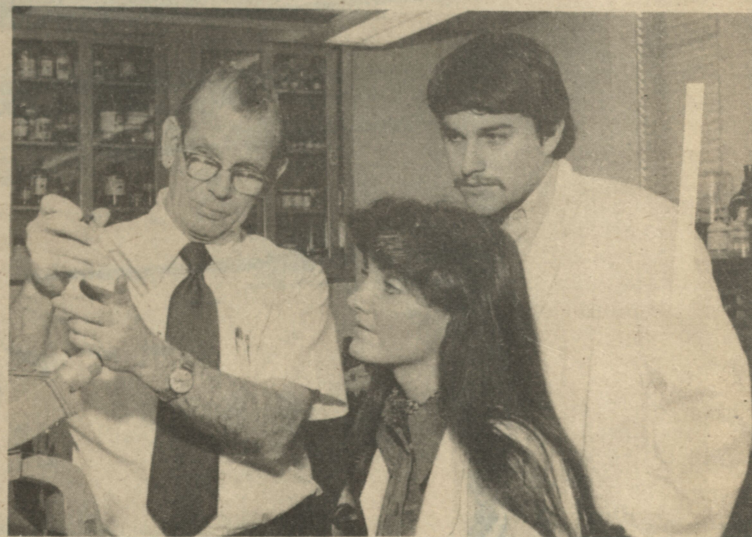

He succeeds Dr. Donald Vestal, who is returning to classroom teaching following a year's leave of absence for professional study.

Dr. Beckett, who assumed his position at AU this month, planned and directed the work of 750 scientists, engineers, and support personnel engaged in research, development, and engineering of weaponry for the Army. He was also technical adviser to the commander of Rock Island Arsenal, serving as senior scientist of an organization with a budget of over $100 million and 4,000 employees.

He holds a B.S. in mechanical engineering and an M.S. in mechanics from the University of Illinois. In 1953 he received the D.S.C. in applied mechanics from Washington University in St. Louis, Mo.

After receiving his doctorate, Dr. Beckett joined the faculty of the mechanics and hydraulics department of the University of Iowa, where he developed undergraduate, master's, and doctoral programs in solid mechanics. When he left in 1967 to join Rock Island Arsenal research, the research support of solid mechanics at Iowa State had increased from zero to an annual budget of more than $300,000, the faculty had expanded from one in 1953 to seven, and graduate students from none to 30 in 1967, under his direction.

AU Called 'Good College at Bargain Price'

Auburn is one of 64 colleges in the U.S. designated by a national consumer magazine as offering a quality education at a reasonable price. Changing Times magazine chose Auburn as one of its "good colleges at bargain prices" based on three academic criteria: (1) average test scores of entering freshmen were well above national averages; (2) selective admission policies; and (3) large proportion of graduates go on to graduate school.

In discussing its criteria, the magazine said that test scores for freshmen usually measure the capacity of students to perform college-level work, and colleges with high scoring students can aim for higher quality academic programs. Selective admissions policies mean that the college can provide quality education for those who have the background for college work. When a large proportion of graduates go on to graduate school, the magazine noted, it indicates a university emphasis on academic achievement as well as showing that undergraduates are successful in being admitted to graduate programs. (Most of the 64 schools on the list exceeded the national average of 30 percent of their graduates continuing for higher degrees.)

"We accept this designation by Changing Times as an indication that we are achieving two of our major purposes," said Dr. Harry M. Philpott, Auburn president. "First, that we are offering a quality education and, second, that we are keeping higher education within the grasp of the majority of Alabamians—a mission that is a vital part of every land-grant institution."

Every college on the list had annual costs—including tuition and fees, room and board, books and supplies, and transportation expenses—below $4,568. Auburn's costs were estimated at $2,500 per year, considerably lower than most of the other schools.

BUILDING BUDGET—

The budget committee of the Auburn Board of Trustees has authorized a revised budget of $1,160,000 for a clinical and research laboratory in the School of Veterinary Medicine's Scott-Ritchey Research Center. Funds for construction are from the earnings of the Ritchey Estate. The facility will be used in the treatment and studies of diseases of small animals as stipulated in the will of Ms. Eleanor Ritchey. Preliminary plans for the building have been completed by the campus planner and bids will be accepted later this spring. The budget committee also approved $100,000 for repairs to Magnolia and Bullard Halls to meet current fire and safety codes for those dormitories.

RAINER ELECTED—Dr. Rex Rainer '44, professor and head of Auburn's Civil Engineering Department, has been elected president of the Alabama Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers. Dr. Ray Moore, assistant professor at Auburn, was elected secretary-treasurer.

FIJIS TOPS—Social fraternity Phi Gamma Delta set a record last quarter with a composite grade point average of over 2.0 (B). The average is the highest any social fraternity has ever made at Auburn although the veterinary professional fraternities, Omega Tau Sigma and Alpha Psi had higher grades. Following the Fijis were FarmHouse, Phi Kappa Psi, Beta Theta Pi, and Sigma Phi Epsilon, all averaging higher grades than those for undergraduate men as a whole. However, only the Fijis scored higher than undergraduate women or sororities as groups.

FEEDING THE HUN-

GRY—If American knowhow could be transmitted to the underdeveloped countries, it would go a long way toward solving their problems believes Auburn industrial engineering professor J. Grady Cox '42. Dr. Cox was among government, industry, and education representatives invited to Washington recently to discuss ways of bridging the technology transfer gap. Delegates to the conference will plan for a 1979 UN conference on science and technology for development, which will aim to determine the abilities of third world countries to use science and technology for economic and social development. Although the theme isn't new, Dr. Cox says that the conference is one of the strongest "collective thrusts to date towards solving world hunger and health problems." He sees the engineer as the professional to apply the technology to each country but predicts that significant progress worldwide will be relatively slow because of the burgeoning population, the variety of cultures, and the wide range of variations in managerial and technological development.

BEST PAPER—Two Auburn graduates, David A. McCurdy '76 and G. Wade Adams '76, have taken top honors in the AIAA Student Paper Competition. After winning the regional AIAA competition and then second place honors at the Sixth International Student Conference of the International Astronautical

LET IT SNOW, LET IT SNOW—Auburn Students greeted the snow flakes which fell here during January with happiness. The first time snow fell it came in the middle of the morning and students made their appointed rounds to classes with more than usual delight. When snow fell again a week later, the University closed for a day and students had a holiday.

Federation Congress in California last October. The two, in national competition, presented their paper on a system which can be removed from orbiting space shuttle and then boost the cargo into a higher orbit. Wade is now a graduate student in aerospace engineering at Auburn and David joined NASA-Langley Research Center in Virginia this month.

FACULTY SURVEY—A recent survey shows that Auburn faculty members are intensely interested in students and teaching and highly motivated to become more effective teachers. But it also shows that teachers are concerned with the lack of scholarly seriousness of Auburn students; with the lack of a long-range institutional plan; with the present teacher evaluation methods; with the limited opportunities for interdisciplinary programs, and with the emphasis on and rewarding of research and scholarship rather than teaching effectiveness.

The survey of the faculty was made in conjunction with the Project on Institutional Renewal Through the Improvement of Teaching, in which Auburn is one of 16 institutions in the nation to participate. The survey was conducted at Auburn through the Office of Institutional Analysis, and according to its director, Dr. Gerald Lieschuck '64, the most interesting revelation of the survey is the faculty's intense interest in teaching: "The faculty were highly positive on this point. Ninety-two percent agreed that they can't seem to find time to do all the things they want to do. They indicated that their work is exciting, fulfilling, and has been successful. The faculty even rated teaching above family relationships as a source of personal satisfaction."

That less than four percent of the faculty indicated a heavy interest in research at Auburn—which is regarded as a major research university in several areas—surprised the statisticians. "Six times as many—23 percent—showed a preference for teaching. The rest were interested in both, but leaned more to teaching than to research."

In other areas 89 percent of the faculty felt that the majority of their colleagues are genuinely interested in the academic progress of their students. Fifty-seven percent felt that less than half the students are interested in academic achievements.

A profile of faculty characteristics shows that 51 percent of the faculty consider themselves politically independent. Of the others, 25 percent are Democrats and 23 percent Republicans. Fifty-four percent consider their political views moderate, 22 percent conservative, and 20 percent liberal.

HIGH HONOR—Martial Honnell, Auburn electrical engineering professor, has received one of the highest honors in his profession: he has been elected a Fellow of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers. Prof. Honnell was chosen from among 300 nominees and cited for "contributions to electrical engineering education and electronic instrumentation." He has been on the Auburn faculty for 19 years, and this year he was named to the Distinguished Graduate Faculty Lectureship sponsored by the Auburn Alumni Association and the Graduate School.

Lab Technology

finding an approved internship program.

"More places train medical doctors than have acceptable internship programs for lab techs," according to Prof. Wheatley. Lab tech internship openings are filled on a competitive basis and while a majority of Auburn students graduating in laboratory or medical technology remain in the state—working in the smaller community hospitals as well as the larger institutions throughout the state—many graduates have to wait awhile or find employment of some other sort before they are accepted into an internship program.

More Professional Education Here

"We have proposed to modify our present curriculum in medical technology to an integrated program. This will require Auburn to assume a greater teaching role in the professional phase of training and this can be accomplished only with the additional equipment we have requested," Prof. Wheatley said. As an example he said, "With the additional equipment and the integrated program in effect, Auburn would train lab tech graduates in a clinical situation for approximately six months. At the end of such a period, we here at Auburn would be able to place the student in an acceptable internship program. The student would be assured of completing his education, receiving lab experience, and completing his internship for certification without the threat of graduating and having no program at all to go into. We do not need to waste Alabama's most precious resource, her people."

Unadulterated Soul Food

by Jerry Roden, Jr., '46

One of the most costly errors in current educational theory and practice is the motivational fallacy: The pervasive belief that the prime obligation of a teacher is to create a desire to learn in the hearts and minds of his or her students. This fallacious concept drives many committed teachers and educational theorists to spend untold hours day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, developing ingenious methods of decorating, sugar-coating, and even camouflaging the educational fare to entice our little darlings to partake thereof.

Virtually everything in our daily experience and in human history contradicts the notion that we need worry about instilling a desire for knowledge in any normal youngster: He comes into the world equipped with the kind of insatiable curiosity that made our universal mother susceptible to the blandishments of the serpent in the Garden. From the time he learns to formulate sentences until he leaves home and even thereafter, he subjects his parents to an interminable barrage of questions in his quest for more perfect knowledge.

If simple observation of the young people around us and recollection of our own lifelong striving for truth is not sufficient to convince us of the bountiful human endowment of a desire for knowledge, we need only turn to any significant historical document and the comments of the sages upon it. Perhaps no other document is more appropriate for this purpose than the Bible: In one sense, the book of books in its entirety is simply the record of mankind's quest for knowledge—both forbidden and redemptive, practical and spiritual, ephemeral and enduring.

And, despite its age, the Bible remains one of the most challenging and relevant of books for untold millions. Many of us are fascinated not only by the Bible itself but also by commentaries that provide new insights into the wisdom for living and dying that it offers us. Lying before me now is Elie Wiesel's Messengers of God: Biblical Portraits and Legends, a gripping work about Biblical heroes whose stories have informed and haunted me from the time of my earliest memory.

Like other enduring works of religion, literature, history, and science, the Bible does not attempt to sugar-coat the facts about the beauty, complexity, and tragedy of human nature and existence. Biblical writers employ the techniques of poetry not to decorate but to dramatize with the greatest possible artistic simplicity inspired messages to tell us what life is about, to admonish us about what to do and about what we cannot do with impunity.

Thus, to me at least, the Bible's enduring appeal suggests that the best way for educators to spend their time is to immerse themselves in life, their subjects, and the relationships of those subjects to the perennial questions of human existence. Imbued with the resultant knowledge,

Gold in Junk Pile

By Bob Sanders '52

(Reprinted from The Auburn Bulletin)

You sometimes find the most intriguing things in junk piles. There came this anonymous voice over the phone the other Saturday morning, just after I had managed to get first one, and then, a while later, the other eye open.

"Hey, down on South Gay, somebody's throwing away a bunch of old records and stuff, just piling it out by the street...."

'Nuff said. As soon as I could get some clothes pulled on and the sleep washed out of my eyes, I hopped in my vehicle and tore off over in that direction.

And sure enough, just as the voice had said, there were stacks of old 78 records, from the vintage period of 1945 and 1946 and along in there. A lot of them were broken—that's the main hazard of fooling with old 78s; they'll break if you look at them harshly. I don't play mine as much as I'd like to, because I usually break about one out of four in the getting-out process.

But there were some unbroken collector's items in the garbage there, several Bing Crosbys, some Jimmy Dorseys, some Glen Grays, a couple of Chuck Wagon Gang classics, and even a very rare Asch twelve-inch 78 by Mary Lou Williams and Coleman Hawkins and some other all-stars that I was afraid was too warped to play, but it did play, and with remarkable fidelity, considering everything.

I put them all gently in the backend of my pickup and drove like an egg man back to Prestige Plaza, where I got out a sponge and eased the crud of several decades from the surfaces of the records and put them on the machine.

Then, as I listened, I looked through another treasure I had uncovered in the trash pile, the Billboard Encyclopedia of Music for 1946-47.

It's a huge volume (the eighth annual edition) that dealt with the entire music industry spectrum of those years.

There are sections about classical music, folk music, big band music, all kinds of music. And there are breakdowns into the music situations in radio (and even video) and in movies and on juke boxes (with full page ads showing the fantastic stylings of the various manufacturers'—Wurlitzer, Seeburg, Buckley, Packard, Bally, Musicales, etc.—gleaming machines.)

Other sections go into personal appearances and booking agencies and publishing and licensing and production of records and musical instruments and sheet music....

There are lists of radio stations and of the record shows they had on the air and of the live musical shows they had on the air. There are lists of artists and agents, lists of everything conceivably connected with the industry.

And there are ads. Record companies are represented in one and two page ads that list every artist affiliated with them. Individual artists have gigantic spreads that tell everything about the artist a body could possibly want to know. Just for a random example: "Tony Pastor, America's foremost vocal stylist and his orchestra, featuring Tommy Lynn, the Clooney Sisters, Stubby Pastor. Direction: General Artists Corporation. In personal appearances (a list of the various hotels and ballrooms the band had recently appeared in) on the air (a list of radio shows on which the band had been featured); on records, Cosmos records all over the country; on Langworth transcriptions"

And there was the inevitable list of the most popular records—week by week for the

they can enter the classroom with certainty that the hungry flock cannot resist the lure of real, unadulterated food.

Apologies to Jerry Brown

By Lisa Harris '77

(Reprinted from The Auburn Plainsman)

If my friends could see me now... they'd think I was crazy. Because this ultra-cool cosmopolitan, whose favorite freshman quotes were "Shug who?" and "When I lived in California..." has fallen in love with Auburn and with Dixie. I hope my Yankee mother can forgive me.

I hate to admit the reason I came to Auburn was it was the only place I could afford. I looked with a certain patronization at those crazy people who wandered around Auburn fall Saturdays waving shakers and buying programs, and I swore if I ever saw orange and blue again I'd go crazy. My favorite trick was looking at that big picture of Pat Sullivan and watching the faces when I asked who he was.

But there's something about Auburn that gets in your blood. There aren't many events to equal the good old-fashioned hell-raising at Toomer's Corner after a win, or any other time. There aren't too many people friendlier than the Auburnites who smile at perfect strangers just because there's snow on the ground. And there are few sights more comforting than driving back from the fifth cup of Burger King coffee at 3 a.m. during finals and seeing every light on at Dexter Arms.

Auburn means studying among the azaleas in Samford Park in the spring and watching the leaves turning gold in the fall. It means Alabama jokes and Samford Tower and Saturdays at Chewacla. It means a thousand little traditions which I used to put down that now form a part of my life.

Maybe it's just senioritis, but Auburn has come to mean a lot to me. There was a time when I could hardly wait to get away, and now, for a military brat with no real roots, Auburn has come to mean home. And in that process, the South has become my home, too.

Before I moved to Alabama all I knew of the South was George Wallace and the Grand Ole Opry. To put it mildly, I was not looking forward to living here. And after living in metropolitan Los Angeles, it was quite a change. But I've grown to love the peace and quiet of the Alabama countryside, the charm and politeness of the Southern people. Life is easy going here, with an acceptance that tomorrow will come without being obsessed with it.

There is a sense of tradition and community spirit, a pride in being "from" someplace rather than just "living" there. People have known each other for a long time, and the current of friendship runs deep.

There are a lot of problems in the South—that can't be denied. But it's a place I've decided to call home and offer some contribution rather than moving on somewhere else—where there would still be problems, but there wouldn't be the same spirit.

So send my apologies to Jerry Brown—the Auburn spirit has done its job. I think I'll stick around Dixie for a while.

preceeding year, broken down into several different categories like best selling retail records, best selling sheet music, most played juke box records, etc.

Some very important names-to-be were just emerging. Perry Como was becoming a household name with "Till the End of Time," "Dig You Later," "Prisoner of Love," and "Surrender."

Dinah Shore hit the jackpot. Her "The Gypsy" (which was covered and also put on the best-selling lists by the Ink Spots and Sammy Kaye) was perhaps the big record of the year—and deservedly so. I get out my old scratchy Columbia 78 and play it quite often. The arrangement, par-

An Alumnus Remembers Auburn from 1914-1919

By Hoyt M. Warren '39

Today, William H. Philpot, Jr., '19, is enjoying a retired life in Terry, Miss. He and his wife often think of Auburn, Ala., and his family who once lived here and in nearby Macon County. He is quick to explain that his family name is spelled with one "t," and that there is no relationship to Harry M. Philpott, the well-known president of the school Mr. Philpot attended and loved so much. The Philpots were in Auburn and Macon County long before the War between the States, he explains.

Early Philpot at Auburn

It is unusual to run across the name Philpot associated with Auburn in its early days, and quite unusual to find a very active son of a Confederate veteran, since that conflict ended some 111 years ago. Young William was born when his father, William H. Philpot, Sr., was about fifty years of age and he remembers much of the information passed on to him by his father, the old confederate captain, who now rests in Hurtsboro, Ala., following a long and eventful life in Macon County.

It was natural that William, Jr., would come to Auburn to study, for his uncle, John Newman Philpot, owned property in the center of town in its very early days, and his father was much attached to the school as he lived nearby. At 81, William H. Philpot's mind is keen and he loves to tell about the war, as related to him by his father, and about his experiences while a student at Auburn. It's in-particularly the opening, is a thing of rare beauty. Incidentally, as is so often the case, it is a beauty apparently impossible to recapture. A few years ago she re-recorded some of her big hits for Capitol with approximately the same arrangements, but the sad hurtfulness of the original wasn't there.

She also hit the money with "Doin' What Comes Naturally" and "Laughing on the Outside," as did several other artists. In those days, if one singer of group had a hit, others would jump on the bandwagon and there'd sometimes be several versions of the same song on the most played and bought lists.

And those are but a couple of flashes from the wonderful world of popular music at its peak period, as witnessed by the fact that nearly all of the "Hit Parade" tunes of that era became enduring standards that have been re-recorded and re-re-recorded by dozens of artists. They have become permanent fixtures in the field of popular music that will be played and heard as long as there are things to play them on and people to hear them.

Thanks to that voice on the telephone (sounded a little like that Jones fellow) for a lovely little musical time machine trip.

Interesting to hear one Philpot tell of Auburn in times past, and contrast that with these days when Auburn University is headed by another Philpott.

Auburn in 1914

Mr. Philpot writes in retrospect that, "It is May 1914, and I am a sophomore. We are standing at the west side of the bank building on College Street just across the street from Toomers Corner (at the present intersection of College and Magnolia) facing the campus. There you see a white fence cornering at a right angle, confining the campus. No, you say. There is an arch there, but you are wrong. That arch came three years later. Now let's face down West Magnolia and commence to walk down the sidewalk (unpaved). We soon come to an alley entering behind the bank building and a grocery store. We cross this alley and you might say this is the Lambda Chi House, but you are wrong again. This is where the livery stable stands that is owned and operated by the Thomas Hotel. They rent horses and vehicles to people who wish to ride about the Auburn area."

Epileptic Goats from South America

"We look left, and south, toward the campus and see a small green frame building. Dr. Clifford Hare is in that building working in his office and laboratory, and between that green building and the red brick one, you see a bunch of epileptic goats from South America. You can clap your hands and they will go into an epileptic seizure. A few days ago they ate Dr. Hare's cultures and he poured high life (carbon disulphide) on their backs and they left in a hurry for Dr. Cary's and Dr. McAdory's department. They were running a special study on these goats."

Vet Department

"We continue westward past Mr. Toomer's orchard and green-painted house, and about halfway down the hill we look toward the left across the street, and we see the vet department (located where Drake Infirmary is now). I am studying physiology there by day and have taken bacteriology over in that little two story wooden building. At the bottom of the hill we come to a narrow wooden bridge over the little stream. If we look closely we may see four empty beer bottles in the water. I threw them in there because I was afraid Mrs. McAdory (where I boarded) would find them in my room."

"Across the bridge we see a two-story white building. That is one of 'the Ranches.' Halfway up the hill we see the Steele's home, and a little further a small cotton patch, and at the top of the hill two large Magnolia trees. Behind these trees is a two story antebellum white house with large white columns in front. That is where Dr. Isaac S. McAdory lives with his wife and their daughter, Freddie, a beautiful young lady about 19 years old. It is also where I live, and it is called McAdory Ranch. You see, nearly every family in Auburn cared for some of us, or we would have had no place to stay. Dr. C.A. Cary's home was called 'Cary's Castle,' and other places had their own special names. I am a sophomore in civil engineering, but most of the students think I am taking Vet because of where I live."

Dr. McAdory— A Humanitarian & An Excellent Teacher, Thorough in his work Yet Kind in his contact With Students

"Dr. McAdory was a humanitarian and an excellent teacher. He was very thorough in his work, yet kind in his contact with his students—a wonderful man. Little could I see in those bygone days that some day when the name McAdory is mentioned, that some would remember him and see him as 'brick and mortar' for the building named for him. He was more than that to Auburn."

"Freddie married my good friend Lan Lipscomb, and I understand that they contributed a good citizen to Auburn who is now operating his father's drug store. I spent all my years at Auburn at 'McAdory's ranch' with the exception of the spring of 1919, when I came back from the War. That spring I helped Professor Blake and stayed at his house and graduated in pharmacy in the class of 1919."

"One day when Dr. Blake's son Bobby was very small, I asked, 'What are you going to make out of Bobby?' His answer was, 'I am going to pick out a well rounded course for him. I am going to see him graduate, then I am going to carry him home and give him a good dinner, carry him then to the front porch and kick him down the steps.' I understand that Bobby is now the successful head of the Auburn National Bank in Auburn."

Dr. Thach— Stern but True Friend

"I cannot close this 'retrospect' without a word about Dr. C.C. Thach, president of the college while I was there. He was stern with me but underneath I knew he was a true friend. During my senior year he sent for me. 'Philpot,' he says, 'there is going to be a carnival at Opelika Saturday night, and I know that some of the boys are going up there. I want you to go up there and represent things. Go by the treasurer and get the necessary money.' I knew that it was against the rules to leave the campus without permission, and understood his problem and concern."

"Dr. Thach was right. When I arrived in Opelika in my well cleaned uniform, some 75 students had broken through the gate and were now in the hands of the police. I explained that I represented the college, and they turned them over to me. My orders were 'squad right, doubletime, march.' When we got to the depot at Opelika their tongues were hanging out, and I told them to get back to Auburn and get their heads in a book. Dr. Thach sent for me to

Radios at Ballgames?

October 28, 1976

Dr. Harry M. Philpott, President
Auburn University
Auburn AL 36830

Dear Dr. Philpott:

I first met you when you spoke at the Riverside Baptist Church Loyalty Dinner in Jacksonville, Florida, in 1961. I was delighted when you assumed the Presidency of Auburn University, and I have the utmost regard for what you stand for and what you have accomplished at Auburn. I also know that you have many more important things to do than spend too much time on my problem. I would, however, like to provide you the following information.

During the Auburn-Georgia Tech game on October 16, 1976, I was approached by a security guard in the south stands and asked to discontinue listening to the football game over my radio. I was told that radios are not allowed in the stadium. In answer to my inquiry, the security guard advised that there had been no complaints by other spectators. The only explanation I received was that, "It is printed on the back of the ticket and must be enforced." The radio I was using is the very small shirt pocket, transistor type with an earplug speaker.

Information received from radio broadcasting people indicates that the presence of portable radios in the stadium can not possibly cause interference with the radio broadcasting operations during the game. It is understood that the only way it could cause a problem is when such radios may be within inches of the microphone being used to broadcast the game. Information contrary to this is, however, printed in Auburn football programs.

Further information pertaining to this type of situation indicates that there are no such enforced restrictions for Alabama football games in Tuscaloosa.

I can understand the restriction of the use of large portable-type radios which are bulky, without earplug speakers, and which may be used to listen to other games. These may be some of give him a report. I told him I didn't think he wanted the details. He pulled his long nose and said he did, but I insisted that the best interest of the college had been served. He pulled his nose again, and said 'I suppose so, Philpot. You may go.' He, of course, already knew the story. He just wanted to keep me on my toes."

The Philpot story goes on at Auburn. One of his relatives is Mary Eleanor Grigg Vachon '64 who is married to Dr. Reginald Vachon '59, an Auburn mechanical engineering professor.

the original reasons for restricting radios at Auburn games. I do not, however, understand why very small transistor-type portable radios utilizing earplugs could possibly cause a disturbance which can justify confiscation of the radio battery (without receipt indicating confiscation) or a request on the part of the security guard indicating that noncompliance would result in the fan "having to take the radio back to the car." The security guard did (1) ask me to take the radio back to my auto and when I declined to leave the action of the game, (2) confiscate the radio battery and refused to give me a written receipt indicating he had taken the battery. This incident occurred early in the game, and I observed him during the entire remainder of the game, until approximately the last three minutes, patrol the aisles in the south stands and confront several other fans using earplug-type radios. Incidentally, his manner of approach was to tap the fan on the shoulder with his "night stick."

Please consider this letter as the request of an Auburn fan and a member of the Auburn Alumni Association to "lift the ban" on the use of small, transistor, earplug-type radios at football games in Auburn.

Sincerely
C. D. Kinney '58

Editor's Note: The letter above was sent to us earlier this month as a letter to the editor.

Auburn Alumnews
Auburn, Alabama

Dear Miss Lovvorn:

I was distressed to learn that, as part of Auburn's Continuing Education Program, a class in Palmistry is being taught. I consider Palmistry and Astrology to be superstitious, and as a Christian I just wanted you to know how I feel about it.

Yours truly,
Annie Lois Camp '52

Disappointing Basketball Season— Looks Like the Cellar for Tigers

Auburn's basketball season has been a disappointment to all concerned as the Tigers continue to play in spurts—completely dominating their opponents on offense and defense then allowing them to whittle away at the Tigers' leads and more often than not allowing their opponents to go on to victory. Turnovers, mental mistakes, and an inability to put together two complete halves of basketball have contributed to the Tigers' downfall this season.

Following the heartbreaking loss to Alabama in Auburn by the score of 74 to 71, the Mississippi State Bulldogs came into Memorial Coliseum on January 5. Led by freshman Ricky Brown, a 6-10 center who has received praise from everyone from Sports Illustrated on down, the Bulldogs won their first Southeastern Conference game by the score of 81-79. Again, Auburn built several eight to ten point leads in the early going only to lead by four at the half. With 8:29 left in the game, Eddie Johnson, who has yet to return to his form of a year ago, stole the ball and laid it in to give the Tigers a six-point advantage at 64 to 58.

However, State came right back, and on a three-point play by Al Perry the Bulldogs took a 76 to 74 lead and never trailed again. For Mississippi State, it was Ricky Brown's 26 points followed by four other players in double figures which helped do in the Tigers. Auburn was led by Eddie's 17 points, but Eddie got only 3 of 14 from the floor while going 11 of 12 from the line. Stan Pietkiewicz added 16 points while Myles Patrick came off the bench and scored 15 points.

On January 8 Auburn found itself in the unfortunate situation of playing against the Ernie and Bernie Show in Knoxville, Tenn. Led by Bernard (Bernie) King with 32 points and 16 rebounds, the Vols easily handed Auburn its third conference loss by the score of 87 to 79. Coach Bob Davis pointed out afterwards that, "we're just playing for position now. Any chance for the SEC title is out of reach now, because three losses in the first three games indicates we aren't capable of playing for the championship." Ernie Grunfeld, the other half of Tennessee's dynamic duo and a former Olympian, scored 23 points and had seven rebounds. For Auburn it was Mike Mitchell's 29 points followed by Eddie Johnson's 19 and Stan Pietkiewicz's 11.

Staying on the road, the Tigers went into Athens, Ga., on January 10 and took out all their frustrations on the hapless Bulldogs. Mike Mitchell had his finest night of the season by exploding for 40 points as Auburn handed Georgia a 95 to 71 loss. However, there were still shades of the typical Auburn performance as the Tigers moved out in front by 19 points in the early going and Georgia cut that lead to 11 at the half and then pulled to within five early in the second half. Auburn finally caught fire and went off and left the Bulldogs as if they were standing still. Myles Patrick scored 12 points and Stan Pietkiewicz and Eddie Johnson each had 11.

The Tigers returned home January 15 to battle the then second-ranked team in the nation, Kentucky, and again the confines of home were not so friendly to the Tigers as the Wildcats posted a 75 to 68 win. Auburn trailed by only two, 66 to 64, with a little over five and a half minutes to play. Then the Tigers hit that old familiar cold spell and went scoreless for the next four minutes as the Wildcats built an eight point lead. Eddie Johnson led all Auburn scorers with 18 points while Jack Givens was high man for the Wildcats with 20. Kentucky had five players in double figures compared to Auburn's three. Following Eddie in the scoring department for the Tigers was Pepto Bolden with 15 and Stan Pietkiewicz with 14.

The Vanderbilt Commodores came calling on the Tigers January 17 and the Tigers quickly welcomed the Vandy team by jumping out to a 21-point lead midway through the first half. But by half-time the Commodores had pulled to within 12 and with just under 13 minutes to play in the contest, Vandy trailed by only two, 57 to 55. Coach Davis explained, "We tried to protect our lead and that's ridiculous. If you get a lead by playing fast then you keep on playing fast." Auburn was able to hang on and down the Commodores by the score of 74 to 69. Stan Pietkiewicz played perhaps his best game as an Auburn Tiger, scoring 21 points and grabbing six rebounds. Unfortunately a bruised foot forced Stan to the bench late in the second half although he suffered the injury in the early going. Eddie Johnson, still having trouble shaking the slump he is in, scored eight points while Mike Mitchell had 18 and Myles Patrick 13.

Auburn fell to 2 and 5 in the Southeastern Conference when Florida visited Auburn on January 22 and went home a 77 to 73 winner. Florida took a seven point lead into the locker room at half and the Gators came out chomping in the second half and built a 13-point lead with 13 minutes remaining. Auburn cut the lead to two but never overcame the powerful inside game of the Gators without Stan Pietkiewicz's outside shooting to draw them out from under the boards. Freshman Bubba Price turned in a stellar performance scoring 21 points to lead all Auburn scorers. Eddie Johnson and Mike Mitchell each added 17 points to the Auburn effort.

Hitting the road once again, the Tigers went to Baton Rouge without the injured Stan, and before a regional TV audience Auburn lost to the LSU Tigers 77 to 73. LSU was paced by the great defensive play of seven-foot Rick Mattick. At one point Auburn's Mike Mitchell ran under the basket for a slam only to have Mattick block the shot and then block Mitchell's follow-up. Following the heroics of Mattick, Auburn went cold and the LSU Tigers roared out in front by eight points. LSU was led offensively by the hot hand of senior Bob Miller who pumped in most of his 27 points from the 20-foot mark. Eddie Johnson led Auburn with 18 points while Mike Mitchell finished with 16. Pepto Bolden had 10 and Myles Patrick contributed 11.

Still on the road and still playing up and down basketball, Auburn was able to come away
